Clean Sweep

Swine flu may not be pretty, but there's no reason the war against H1N1 needs to get ugly.

With chic packaging, cutting-edge design, and enough skin-friendly extras (essential oils, antioxidants) to make a dermatologist swoon, the newest batch of sanitizers bring hygiene to a whole new, beautiful level

Clean Well hand-sanitizer spray ($3/1 oz.) and wipes ($14/box of 20); at Target.

it's about thyme

Alcohol—the FDA's weapon of choice against germs—can be harsh. This brand uses an extract of thyme (and loads of essential oils) to effectively disinfect hands without drying them.

Purell .05 oz. hand sanitizers, $16/set of 6; amazon.com.

lucky charm

Improve your odds of not getting sick by snapping one of Purell's new portable minis onto your purse's hardware—you'll never leave home without it. Set includes blue, green, neon, pink, purple and yellow.

the light idea

Research suggests that rinsing alone won't successfully remove all the pathogens from your toothbrush. Don't want to take any chances? This ingenious UV holder zaps 99.9 percent of bacteria and germs in just seven minutes.

Violight Zapi toothbrush sanitizer, $30; violight.com.

Tiny Tilia hand sanitizers, $10 each; tinytillia.com.

If the thought of displaying a generic sanitizer next to your Serena and Lily baby linens gives you hives, this adorable, paraben-free formula is for you—and your little one.

EO hand-cleansing wipes, $6/10; eoproducts.com.

fresh picked

This formula uses organic ethanol to knock out germs in seconds and leaves hands smelling faintly of fresh-cut lavender. Unlike many alcohol-based sanitizers, EO wipes won't dry out skin because they're chock-full of moisturizing glycerin and aloe vera.

... and for the serious germaphobe

Are you the kind of person who uses a wad of tissues to open bathroom doors? Then you will love this high-tech zapper. Simply wave the UV wand over contaminated surfaces (countertops! cell phones! stuffed animals!) for 10 seconds and—poof—germs disappear. Great for quick, stealthy cleanups after a sick person leaves your home or office.

Zadro Nano-UV Wand, $160; drugstore.com.
